PEACE AND VICTORY.

"Let us have peace!" said General Grant when the war was finished. There were some people who were fighting the war for the purpose of gratifying personal ambition or promoting personal advantages. Grant valued public sentiment when he rebuked the warlords. "Let us have peace!" says Chairman Crow of the Republican State Committee, and he voices the sentiment of the Republican party as a whole. Republicans feel that there was enough fighting in 1912 and that they do not want to have any more wrangling on the part of persons pursuing factional ambitions or revenges.

The Philadelphia factions must settle their differences in their own way and their own time, and they must try not to mix them with state or national affairs, simply because they won't mix. The people outside of the Quaker City are not interested, and they will if we mistake not positively refuse to be dragged into the controversy, but on the contrary will administer a stinging rebuke to those who do attempt to involve the Republican party in the state.

Chairman Crow has a just appreciation of the situation. While in Pittsburgh on Saturday, he was asked to give his opinion of it. This is what he said:

"As Chairman of the Republican State Committee, I am naturally in close touch with the Republican sentiment of the state, both in the great centers of population and in the rural communities. I find a general desire expressed that we go into the presidential contest as a united party. Our success in the nation this fall demands that there be party unity all along the line. In the great Republican stronghold of Pennsylvania there should be nothing to mar that harmony."

In the election of 12 national Delegates-at-Large, and the nomination of an Auditor-General and a State Treasurer, no legitimate issue can be found for a state-wide contest. The one desire that I find expressed is that we send representative men to Chicago to sit in the Republican National Convention, and that we nominate candidates for the two state offices who will command the respect and support of a solid party in the fall. Let them be chosen in a primary free from factional feeling, and with the one thought in mind that we are preparing to meet the common enemy in November."

The politicians and would-be politicians of Pennsylvania and the country will do well to recognize the temper of the Republican party. A large number of Republicans indulged their independence to the point of party ticket this fall, and they have not the slightest sympathy with kickers and kickers, or anything that does not spell complete harmony.

The bugaboo of Ross Perrowe won't do. The delegates will be chosen and the candidates nominated at the Republican primary. The People will rule. Outside of Philadelphia, Sen. Perrowe will have little to do with the matter, and the Vares will have less. The Republican party has no time to bother itself about the Philadelphia factions. It has a great work to do. Pennsylvania is a great Republican state. It must so record its vote in the coming Presidential contest.

The Democratic administration of national affairs must go. It has proven to be incompetent and unworthy, altogether unfit for the duties which it has been entrusted with. It is the part of the Republican party to relieve the country of this incubus. In the meantime it has no time nor inclination to engage in factional quarrels, and we feel sorry for anybody who thinks he will be able to take advantage of the situation to promote his personal interests at party expense.

DEMOCRATS DON'T RESIGN.
The President has seen fit to deny a rumor that he was seriously considering resigning his office in case Congress failed to support him in his irreconcilable policy with the remark that it was unworthy of any American newspaper.

So it was. It was unworthy of the perpetuity of such newspaper. It has been recorded of Democrats that few die and none resign.

No American newspaper need think for a minute that President Wilson is going to resign his office so lightly. The President may not always be able to see and fully distinguish between the rights and duties of the three coordinate branches of the Government, but he never has any doubt as to the powers of his own or his ability to exercise them properly.

Under such circumstances the suggestion of resignation is a insult. It never came from a Democratic source. In the meantime it is interesting to observe that the leading branch of the Government at Washington is inclined to take itself more seriously and to accept at full value the equal power and station conferred upon it by the Constitution.

WHICH BREWSTER WILL HELP.
The brewers who contributed to the Democratic party last time, though in other occasions they contributed to the Democratic party, The Democratic authorities are not going that far back, however.

They do not ask the brewers for a contribution to the Democratic campaign fund, because they know it will not be forthcoming. The brewers are just now supporting the Republican party.

But the Democratic administration has taken a position to make the brewers contribute to the public revenues, and if there is anything that needs contributions just now it is the public treasury under Democratic management and control. The lines of the brewers will help materially to make revenue where revenue is needed.

It will be recalled that as a revenue-raiser the Democratic tariff bill has been a dismal failure.

Slippery streets are the joy of the Connelville boy, but they are not things for the horse to contemplate, especially if he is not roughshod. Perhaps the suggestion of a snow plow for the sidewalks should be changed to the streets. If the principal streets were cleaned of snow immediately after it has fallen, they would not become very slippery.

The Undesirable Citizen has been invited to take a sneak.

The announcement of a Greene county Democratic organ that Colonel Crago is with the President in the matter of Preparedness only indicates that Colonel Crago is with his party in the matter of Preparedness. If the President did not have Republican support in his policy of Preparedness it would not have made much progress.

The war on the western front seems to be live enough to suit anybody.

Connellsville just slipped herself $250,000 in bonded indebtedness for municipal affairs and is now asked to make it $250,000 more for school improvements. The latest valuation of Connelville shows that she is good for half a million of indebtedness.

The Republican who tries to rock the boat will be unceremoniously cast out.

The demands of evangelists are no doubt many. Some of the more prominent ones are made on reputable newspapers and are declined for the reason that they are libelous. Evangelists should be careful in their statements, and if it cannot always avoid being libelous, it should at least be sure that it is always truthful.

The American Army bill no doubt looks funny to the European war lords, but it must be remembered that it is just a beginning.

Credo of a climbing up and down time may be expected in the future. The rise in everything. The demand for gasoline is not confined to automobiles for pleasure, either. It has a large demand from industrial interests and the more serious business of war.

Peace and Preparedness is what the Republican party wants and is going to have.

Perhaps the Honorable Jim Mann and his Republican associates may be able to make a deal whereby they will quit, but they have not the slightest sympathy with kickers and kickers, or anything that does not spell complete harmony.

The January shipments of coal and coke from this section would have been even more gratifying if the car supply had been equal to the demand.

The Republican party of Pennsylvania is for Unity and Victory.

Editor Josephus Daniels poses as a subterranean expert. There has been considerable doubt as to the qualifications of the Secretary of the Navy, but there is nothing about subterranean politics around Washington he usually has a line on it.

It is the right of anybody to run for Republican primary nominations, but the candidates who receive the most votes will receive the least consideration, and none other need apply.

College Professors

By GEORGE FITCH,
Author of "At Good Old Seward."

A college professor is a pale, tired man who is trying to teach college boys Latin, sociology and other intellectual subjects in their state schools—the boys, not the professors. The fact that professors are not allowed to wear clubs or cigars in their teaching, is a very hard task indeed, and we should not blame them for taking so little interest in baseball and bridge whist.

No longer able to prevent their students from building bon-fires in the class room.

him the names of a dozen English kings, without knowing to whom they belong, he is supposed to retire and live happily on Audubon Corners, who is a wealthy man, and he is supposed to be a professor of English literature.

Professor are magnificent specialists, but need not be brilliant outside of their particular lines of wisdom. When a professor who is an absolute authority on early persons living attempts to regulate college athletics, he usually makes a mess of it, while more than one four-eyed phenomenon who knows everything about only Ayson spelling has written letters about modern marriage which might, in better have been left in the ink well.

WORKS ALARM CLOCK.

Found Papa Hue Garfield Toll for Daughters' Steady Cakes.

A story is going the rounds of a local youth who calls upon his best girl, once, twice, three times or more, as the case may be, a week. Being interested in the girl he was wont to stay long after the curfew had tolled.

The other night at 10.30 he was surprised to hear the alarm clock start to tinkle. The youth pondered a minute and then said a great light.

"Yes, father sets it twice a day now," his love informed him. "Once for him to get up in the morning and again for you to go to night."

TEN THOUSAND AT MEETINGS OF THE CAMPAIGN SUNDAY

States. It has got to be checked. I can remember when church folk would not do things because the church was against it. It is different now. This is a law-abiding, God-fearing age. There is lawlessness within the church. God says, 'I must be true.' The thing that matters is not your God. Listen to me, you young men. What is your God? I have learned that civilization changes a man's ideas. In the United States we do not worship an image, but we bow to the god of gold. In this city business is god, and takes first place in your heart in gold. Job Jones has been reading the Ten Commandments. He was interrupted by a crying child. 'Take the little fellow out, please,' he said, and the mother carried the youngster to the door of the tabernacle.

Referring to the commandment that says, 'Thou shalt not commit adultery,' Bob Jones declared, 'I would have no commandment in letters of fire over the door of every home in America. You, our citizens, I would have that commandment thundered at the heart of men. The greatest sin of this country will have for the next 50 years to be the sin of impurity.' In expounding on the commandment, 'Thou shalt not kill,' Bob Jones pointed the pulpit and denounced women for avoiding motherhood. He smacked his hands together and told them that their duty was to bear children by any means. He stamped the platform again as he berated men who caused their wives to wilt and die through their enmities.

Concluding his sermon, and delivering the appeal for converts, he declared that despite the fact that his record in the house, he could not stand at the altar. 'How dare any man,' he cried, 'secure out that out his record in the house of the presence of the Holy God, and the Gospel back of him?' At the first call for converts, and as Loren Jones and the choir sang 'Jesus is Calling,' five responded. Bob Jones then called a halt.

'It is going to get out of patience with you Christians,' he declared. 'If you don't want to do anything, why stay away and don't crowd the sinners out. You Christians get to work. The choir began singing "Come Home Tonight," and four more responded. "Do something! Don't stand idle!" Bob Jones exhorted the workers.

'I'll tell you something,' he said. 'A thousand people in this house did not stand as Christians. Go out some why shake hands with him.' During the next verse the total was swollen to 22 for the night, and then 10 more came up.

'I feel like crying over this situation,' Bob Jones said. 'It isn't that the sinners don't come, but it is because this house is full of men and women who have never put forth any effort to save someone else. I had the workers tonight we would have 250 or 300 decisions. It is a sad sight. "Almost Persuaded" and then urged the sinners to get to work. Bob Jones decided at once. "It won't get any more so having this afternoon that I was campaigning for I am right now," he declared, and he wiped the perspiration from his face. "I am just as tired as any one in this house, but I have seen such fine work this afternoon that I am loath to give up."

There was a period for sentences of prayer, during which Rev. W. J. By the Salvation Army spoke briefly. The choir rendered its song and the personal workers put forth energy. Bob Jones leaped from the platform and went to one man who was hesitating and brought him forward.

The meeting closed with the singing of "Hallelujah." The men kept up the record set by the women when they gathered 4,000 persons at the tabernacle yesterday afternoon. The evangelist worked hard times by standing at the front, and many could not extend the invitation even more pressing than he had before.

Mostly the results of the labor of personal workers. As soon as the invitation was extended they got to work. The choir, preachers and laymen talked to sinners. At one time Bob Jones himself left the platform and went back among the seats to urge some men with whom an amount of persuasion had had no effect. He moved on, but the rest held off.

The services were longer than usual, lasting until 5 o'clock, and the evangelist nearly played himself out, so hard did he go after the sins of men. The audience of men, however, did not leave, but stood until dismissed.

The choir was made up of 50 men and led by Loren Jones. Men from the audience were asked to fill up the chairs in the platform. The improvement of choir sang splendidly, and the song did lots toward determining a wavering sinner.

At the beginning of the services Loren Jones discovered something wrong with the singing of the congregation and told the men if they would still be there when the services were over, "The Church in the Wilderness" would sing it to be sung. First the choir sang it, then the congregation, and then both. Loren Jones then said, "I want everybody," a pause for thought, "everybody without whistles to sing." Later those with whistles were also given the chance to sing by themselves.

The West Penn Quartet was called forward by Loren Jones and sang "There's a Land That is Fairer Than This," "In the Sweet Bye and Bye" and "Jesus, Lover of My Soul."

The services were opened with a prayer by Rev. Wilbur Nelson.

Bob Jones in his sermon said, "I've found one thing in a devil's heart. I have found it. The devil isn't in hell. He is in this world. He knows the kind of blood that is in you, but puts it in something that looks good or that tastes good. The devil is after you are in trouble, after you are cursed, degraded or ruined. And a sin that will send your wife to hell will send you to hell. No man was ever a physical wreck from keeping any law of God. A man who says he can't is a renegade." COAL LAND IN DEMAND

Eastern Parties Said to be Making Inquiry for Coking Coal.

The development of the by-product coke business, both actual and prospective, and the recognized need for a supply of coke suitable for that purpose, is attracting the attention of capitalists in several sections of the country.

Thus a large quantity of coal from the Lower Connellsville district is being used in by-product plants with results which are not obtainable from coal from other fields is a fact which has become well established in the product coking circles. Attention has therefore been logically drawn to this district and its coal fields, and the Greencastle and Washington counties as a source of supply for by-product operations.

In this connection a correspondent of The Coal Trade Journal, a correspondent of the statement that the authorities have several inquiries in Pittsburgh lately for coal in the Greencastle and Washington counties, and that they are being made to have come from parties in the East who specify at the same time yield the largest quantity of by-products. They have further required that it be located in the Pittsburgh district, and that they will not consider acreage that is not well suited to the purpose.

It is understood that the Greencastle and Washington counties are being marketed have been tentatively outlined with prospects of deals being consummated.

RUN-DOWN WOMEN

We Have a Remedy That Will Cost You Nothing If It Does Not Help You.

Connellsville women will please realize that we mean just what we say in the above heading. Letters, like the following prove the efficiency of Vinol in such cases:

"For the benefit of the other tired women, I want to say that I keep coming run-down, all plain and I don't seem to have any life in me and I look badly. I read so much about Vinol I decided to try it, and I must say it helped me in every way. I built me up so I felt like a new woman and my friends said they could see a great change in me. I am now Mrs. W. J. Wadsworth, Saratoga Springs, N. Y."

We recommend Vinol to our customers as the greatest strength creator we know—due to the extractive medicinal elements of fresh cod liver oil, without oil, combined with potent taste of iron and beef peptone, all dissolved in a pure medicinal wine. Laughery Drug Co., Connellsville, Pa.—Adv.

BRIDGE COLLAPSES.

Two Killed When Passenger Train Drops 66 Feet.

By Associated Press.

WATERTOWN, N. D., March 6.—Two persons were killed and eight injured, three seriously, when a south-bound passenger train on the South Dakota Central for Sioux Falls plunged 66 feet through a bridge 10 miles south of here.

The weakening of the bridge by fire is believed to have been the cause of the accident. The engine and a safety, but the three coaches behind plunged through the weakened structure.

NINE NEW RAIDERS BUILT BY GERMANS

Fleet Constructed Especially to Prey Upon Commerce.

TWO ARE NOW ON HIGH SEAS

Five British Battleships Disguised as Innocent Merchantmen—Guns Installed on Deck—Apparatuses, Passengers Tied to Plots to Retake Ship, but It Was Afterward Abandoned.

Ideally of the disguised German ship in the Atlantic which captured the British liner Appam off the Canary Islands on Jan. 15 and sent her to New York a German prize of war has been made known by officers of the other British steamships she captured and sank.

These officers went on board the raider and had ample time to look her over from stem to stern. They agreed, as Lieutenant Lloyd Berge, who took the Appam to Norfolk has insisted, that the captor was the Mowee. But she was not the surveying ship Mowee of any other Mowee known in maritime circles. She was a new freight steamship equipped with guns, and as one of the sailors from her in the detail to the Appam told Mrs. Francis Fuller, wife of the commission general of Asbury, who was an Appam passenger, the raiding ship was one of a fleet of nine such vessels fitted out by the Germans to prey on British merchantmen, two of which already have made their way out of the Kiel canal to the high seas.

Saluted British Warships.
Mrs. Fuller said she talked with this German seaman on the Appam several times and that he confided to her one day about the nine craft, saying that the captor of the Appam under her way to see on New York's day and, with a Swedish flag flying, passed and saluted three British war vessels of the North sea fleet.

She was named the Mowee, which is German for eagle, because she was painted white originally and because German craft of that name have been favored by fortune for many years past.

Several of her crew were from the surveying ship Mowee and wore their old hat bands. Others had hat bands marked Kaiser Wilhelm (the Kaiser), the North German Lloyd line, which was sunk on Aug. 24, 1914, off the African coast, near the Canary Islands, by the British cruiser Hildesheim.

The British officers described her as a new freighter that apparently had been selected for hurried conversion into a cruiser, because all her fittings had not been installed, and she could be equipped easily with guns without any ripping away. She may have been the Fongia, a new German ship, they said, as she was the same size and had a lifeboat with the name Fongia on its bow.

A Vessel of 6,500 Tons.
They described her as about a 6,500 ton vessel, with a large coal capacity as well as fittings for fruit carrying,
so that she was designed for cruising, and would have been classed as a troop ship. She had one funnel and two masts. There was no warlike construction about her except the supports for the gun bases, which had been removed roughly into her frames.

She carried the fifteen-centimeter guns, or about six inch ones. Four were installed forward, two on either side and one aft. Those forward were set low on the deck and hidden by wooden shields that lifted up beside them like tripods, and with one corner on them appeared like nothing more harmful than a well stowed forward deck load of freight.

Her holds were filled with coal and supplies enough for a month or more at sea as long as two months without replenishing. None of her foodstuffs were given to the Appam, though, and there was a shortage of food on the British liner. There was no suffering, but during the last four days on the voyage across the Atlantic from the Canaries to Norfolk those aboard her had not had much rice and cheese to eat. Lieutenant Berge ate this with the rest of his crew and his captives. He even permitted Captain Harrison of the Appam to retain his seat at the center table in the saloon.

Quickly Suppressed Plot.
Both the Appam's passengers and the officers from the unknown ship admitted that a plot brewed on the Appam to overpower Lieutenant Berge and the German sailors of the prize crew with him, but the German officer calmly warned every one not to start anything. He pointed to the bombs he had placed about the Appam and explained how he had wired them all to the bridge so that they could all be set off from there by a mere throwing of a switch with his fingers.

He said he had made up his mind if a British cruiser overtook the Appam he would signal to her that he had many British subjects on board and that if she interfered with him he would set off the bombs.

"I'll go with you," he said quietly and firmly, but without a bit of bravado.
Then he added, "Nothing would make me surrender this ship to the British."

Prior to this the Appam's passengers had prayed that a British vessel would appear and rescue them. After that they prayed that no British gunners would find them.

than to be rich with an empty belly."

CURIOUS ORIGIN OF A LAW.

It Was Passed In England on Account of Peter Thelluson's Will.

The Thelluson law, once enacted by the British government, was a law to regulate the disposition of property by will and to prevent the excessive accumulation of estates. It had a curious origin.

On the 27th of July, 1797, one Peter Thelluson, an English merchant of French birth, died in London, leaving a certain sum to his widow and children and the remainder of his property then amounting to several hundred thousand dollars, to trustees to accumulate during the lives of his children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren living at the time of his death and the survivors of them. The accumulation would have been enormous.

The will was contested, but was held valid. In order, however, to prevent such a disposition of property in the future, parliament passed what was called the Thelluson act, or accumulations act, regulating and limiting bequests to such a way as to make great accumulations impossible.

When Peter Thelluson's last surviving grandson died in 1835, a question arose as to whether the oldest male descendant or the male descendant of the eldest son should inherit the property, and this question was decided on appeal by the house of lords in June, 1850. The Thelluson will and the legislation growing out of it were a subject of much discussion by lawyers.—Pittsburgh Press.

Epigrams by Presidents.

Not Many Deathless Sentences Have Been Handed Down to Us.

How very few things which any of our presidents said can anybody recall offhand!

Washington's most frequently quoted phrase is, "In time of peace prepare for war."

John Adams talked all day and wrote diaries all night, but perhaps "Independence forever"—his toast for the very Fourth of July on which he died—is more widely known than any other one thought.

"Few die and none resign," reads Jefferson's list of deathless sentences, although parts of the Declaration of Independence are known to millions.

The doctrine keeps Monroe's name forever to the front, but his state papers, speeches and letters, like those of Madison, John Quincy Adams, Mc-Kinley, Taft and many other men long and honorably in public life, are devoid of handless—nothing to take hold of.

Rutherford B. Hayes gave us one very fine thought, "He serves his country best who serves the country best."

Jackson was forever saying "By the eternal!" but what else?

"With malice toward none" and "in government of the people," etc., are Lincoln's masterpieces. However, his letters and papers are full of unique thoughts and would afford a present day cartoonist enormous opportunities.

Preparation of Parchment.

Parchment is the skin of sheep or other animals prepared in sheets to render them fit for being written upon.

The heavier parchment, used for drum-heads, is made from the skins of asses, older calves, wolves and goats. All these are similarly prepared. The skin, being freed from the hair, is placed in a lime pit to cleanse it from fat. The back is then stretched upon a frame, care being taken that the surface is free from wrinkles. The flesh is pared off with a circular knife, after which it is moistened and whitened spread gradually dried, lightening being occasionally required.

To Lengthen Life of Necktie.

A good many people who are users of four-in-hand ties are more or less dissatisfied with the tie becoming useless after it has been worn a few times.

Take the wide end of the tie with seam up and lay it flat upon a table.
Then thrust in the finger and push the lining. Take the silk cover in the other hand and pull it over the lining, about half of its length. A hot iron is then run over the lining to straighten it out.

Home Grown Goat Meat.

The Maine agricultural experiment station has by its wide studies of inheritance in goats proved the idea current among farmers that foreign grown meat is better than home grown to have little taste. As the Journal of Heredity notes, a variety frequently behaves much better after it has been acclimated for a year or two.

Clever Fish Hawk.

Tucks around the Bosphorus amuse themselves by playing pitch and catch with the hungry fish hawks. They throw fish in the air a lump of raw meat, and the hawks pounce upon the meat before it strikes the ground and make away with it to the little ones.

Steam Power.

The power of steam was known to the ancients, a mechanical contrivance in which it was used being noted by Hero of Alexandria about 100 B. C., but nothing came of it and it was not till the seventeenth century that the power was again recognized.

A Dead One.

"He is a dead one" is not slang. It occurs in Langfellow's "Spanish Student." The clever Chinaman says, "I have a father, too, but he is a dead one."
—Boston Transcript.

Much Harder.

"There is nothing harder than getting out of a bad habit."
"Yes, there is—getting into a good one."—Boston Transcript.

FOR BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH, CROUP, COUGHS AND COLDS

Make the Best Remedy at Home—128 Teaspoonful for 50 Cents.

If everything was sold in as liberal and fair a manner as the Loughrey Drug Co. are selling Schiffmann's New Concentrated Expectoration, absolutely no cause for complaint or dissatisfaction could possibly arise from anyone.
These druggists say: "Buy a bottle of this remedy and try it for bronchitis, whooping cough, severe cough, croup or any bronchial affection, and we will return your money, just as we do with Schiffmann's famous Asthmador, if it does not give satisfaction, or if not found the best remedy ever used for any of these complaints." Why not take advantage of this guarantee and try this medicine, and get your money back, rather than buying another purely on the exaggerated claims of its manufacturer or on the strength of testimonials from others and run the chance of getting something worthless and also wasting your money?

KEEPING CUT FLOWERS.

Methods by Which the Fading Process
May Be Delayed.

Roses, carnations and orchids have been found to keep three times as long if a small quantity of sugar be added to the water, writes Mabel E. Wharton of Oakland, Cal., to Popular Mechanics. A small lump of sugar has also been found beneficial. Other flowers begin to wither as soon as they are cut, and the precious sap running out of the stem causes the cells to collapse immediately. To prevent this the end of the stem must be quickly closed, and this is best done by sealing in a flame or by placing directly in hot water.

The florists of California go so far as to boil the stems of the brilliant pol-solia or Christmas flowers, for which they are famous. The stem is first stuck through a large sheet of paper to prevent the steam from rising directly into the flower and injuring it.

Chrysanthemums and chrysanthemums will keep almost twice as long if placed in fresh water daily, and a small piece is clipped from the ends of the stems each time. While cutting this piece off keep the stem under water so that no air bubbles are allowed to enter the stalk and thus retard the upward flow of water.

If large headed flowers, such as chrysanthemums or peonies, are to be sent some distance insure their arriving in good condition by wrapping each blossom separately in waxed paper.

COME, brother—wake up. Sniff the air and you will find that the thrilling breath of spring is already there.

Look about you. Sense the newest—the freshness—of it all. See how the laggard step of the crowd has quickened into a full swinging stride.

See those cars "break" at the traffic officer's whistle—watch them come down three or four abreast at the "getaway"— hear the shrill, merry note of the sirens and the good natured chaff of the drivers.

This means Spring. This means the "open season." This means Touring at its best.

Surely, you are not going to be "left behind" this year. Surely, you are not going to keep the wife and kiddies indoors when all the world is hiking far afield.

Perhaps, you already know it—but what you need is a big, handsome, sturdy Paige "Six-46".

Nothing less will completely satisfy you—nothing more is necessary for any man no matter how wealthy he may be.

So, don't hesitate—don't procrastinate.

Tell the stenographer that you will be "out" for a short

In the cool of the evening he looked about him. The day world into which he had fallen was peevish but self-contained. Such fabrics as there were, were housewifely from the bolts of a scenery patch of cotton burlap. A little oil in a clay dish with a twisted wick of cotton giving forth more smoke than light seemed to fix him in his setting of prehistoric man. The rice, gathered from an enduring bottom, forked with manure, the backbone of the household's sustenance. From the outcrops of the abandoned cane fields, with the assistance of an antediluvian hand-mill and an equally antiquated iron pot, they made the black strip that served for sugar. Salt, slightly alkaline, was plentiful. A few cows and their progeny lived in the open and fared well, for, even untill, the lands of the valley were rich. An occasional member of the herd was carried off to market by the old clerk. The proceeds bought the very few contributions of civilization necessary to the upkeep of the lean life.

Gazed With a Sort of Numbled Emotion.

sort of numbled emotion into her great dark eyes. Those eyes were wells of simplicity, love, fidelity, but below all that there were depths unmeasured and unmeasured that gave all and demanded all.

In the midst of the husband who believed himself deserted and betrayed there no longer existed any barrier between him and this woman who had come so strangely into his life. Marriage with her was no wrong to Allan. The last scraps of civilization and of law fell from him like a garment thrown aside and he became the husband of the girl who had so innocently wooed him.

CHAPTER XI

Collingford gave a sigh of relief when he saw what manner of place was Maple House. As they gathered around the great table for dinner he was the only stranger and he did not feel it. Nance was there with the fair smile of a mother that was just put her children to bed. Chasley Stirling, teasing Clements, tried to forget that Monday and the city were coming together. Mrs. J. Y., with Collingford on her right and the judge on her left, held quiet away the wine and nodded reassuringly at the old captain who was making gestures with his eyes to the effect that a whisky and soda should be immediately offered to the guest. J. Y., pretty gray by now, but thoughtful and kindly, at the other end of the table, Clem was beside him.

It was not until the men were sitting alone after the glass of port, in which all had drunk, that Collingford, looking at that house, that the judge said, casually, "Collingford saw Alan in Africa."

"Eh! What?" said the captain, surprised to sudden interest. "What's that about Alan?"

"I ran across Alan Wayne in Africa," said Collingford, smiling. "Do you want me to tell you about it?"

Nance called Chasley Stirling out. "You shirker," she said, "come and sit down in the hammock."

"Collingford was just going to tell about meeting Alan in Africa," said Chasley indignantly. And then Nance said, "Oh!" and wanted to send him back but he wouldn't go.

Collingford was one of those men who are sensitive to music. The melody did not run to him but he loved an understanding ear. He looked at the judge's keen but restless face, at the captain's glancing eyes, which somehow had assumed a kindly glint, at J. Y.'s rugged figure, suddenly grown tense, and he knew that Alan Wayne was near to the hearts of these three. He fingered his wine glass. "If I was one of those men," he began, looking at nobody, "who dislike Ten Percent, Wayne I wouldn't tell you about him, but I'm not. It took me only two hours to get over hating him and those two hours were spent in a brooding on the wrong end of a half-finished bridge."

"Pardon Bodsky and I were on skid. We were headed home after a long and unsuccessful hunt in new country and we were as sore and tired and bored with the life of the wild as two old-timers ever get. On the day I'm telling you about we were trekking up a river gorge to a crossing. After lunch and the long rest we still had ten miles to go to cross and it didn't help things to know that once over we had to come straight back on the other side. During the first hour's march in the afternoon we heard the strangest sound that ever those wilds gave forth. It was like hammering on steel but we refused to believe our ears until a sudden curve brought us bang up against the inevitable fact of a girder-bridge in the throes of construction. Before the thought of the sacrifice to the game country—before we could see in this noisy wasteland the root of our recent bad luck—came the girl thought that we didn't have to do ten miles up that gorge and ten back. We wouldn't have whopped except that men don't whoop in Africa—it scares the game."

"I said the bridge was in the throes of construction. It was just that. The two look glances, reaching from helmet to helmet, with their spidery trusses hanging underneath, fairly swayed with sweating figures, and the figures were black. It was that that brought us to a full stop and just then our eyes were fixed with the intensity of discovery, one of the workers looked up, saw us, relaxed and gave the loud grunt which stands in Landin for 'Just' look at that!' in English. "The babbling and hammering around him ceased, but while he still stared at us, we saw a veritable apparition. A white man, hung between heaven and the depths of the gorge, was racing along the top of the slippery girder. His helmet blew off, hung poised, and then plunged in long tackling sweeps. The man was dressed in a cotton shirt, white trousers and thick wooden shoes. No boots. Of course, I didn't notice all that till afterwards. In his hand he carried a sjambok. Suddenly the staring dorky seemed to feel him coming but, before he could turn, the sjambok quirt came down with the ringing sting of hide on flesh. We saw the blood spurt. The negro toppled without a cry. He fell inside, caught on a truss, clung, and finally with a struggle drew himself up on to a stringer. A shout of laughter went up from his fellows. Bodsky and I had heard it often—the laugh of the African for his brother in pain. And then they fell to work again. The black with the blood dripping on his back, rested long enough to get his breath and then climbed back to his place on the girder. He was grinning. Don't ask me to explain it. Men have died trying to explain Africa."

"The white man had stopped and half turned. He stood, a little-eyed, dingo, on the girder, and switched the sjambok to and fro. His eyes were blazing. From his lips dropped a pat of all the vile words in Landin. Swabill and a built a dozen curses into the words that a white man learns first if he listens to natives. The jargon seemed to include the blacks. They worked as clumsily as ever but harder. They started to sing, as the African does when he's gutting up a special burst of speed. Then the white man walked off the girder on our side, out of the way. 'Now's our time,' I heard him say. He shook his head slowly from side to side but I was already under way. I walked up to the white man and asked him if he could let us across. He glanced around as if he hadn't seen our outfit till that moment and then he looked on square in the eyes. 'We knock off at six,' he said, and that was all."

"I turned back. I'd been angry before but never as angry as that. Bodsky was already getting up the id of a tent, to keep the horses. He said with his quiet little laugh that you never hear when they're anything to laugh at. 'Look here, Bodsky,' I said, 'let's wait to the old crossing.' And he answered, 'My dear chap, I'm going to keep the horses. You wouldn't miss for a shot at elephant. That man is Ten Percent Wayne.'"

"Where'd you meet him?" I asked. "Never met him," said Bodsky. "but I saw him. So had I. We sat down together under the sky on a couple of loads and propped two whiskey-and-water on another load in front of us and watched Wayne while Wayne watched his men."

"Where'd you see him?" I asked. "I said and ran the sweat off my eyebrows with my finger. "Bodsky looked at me pityingly. 'So you want to get burned again. Does that man look to you as though he was thinking about a drink? Well, let me tell you he isn't. Every bit of him is thinking about that bridge every minute. God! I haven't seen men driven like that since I was a boy. Once more let's see something new in Africa. And I've never seen a man drive himself like that anywhere. All the Mongolian and Tartar that is said to lurk in every Russian squalor to be jerking out of Bodsky's narrowed eyes."

"We sat there and drank and smoked and sweated, and I talked. Every once in a while Bodsky would say something. First it was: 'Those boys are from the South. Must have brought them with him.' Then it was: 'He knows something about the sun. He keeps his head in the shade-spot from that lonely pulpit.' And finally: 'Collingford, I never despised your intellect before. What are you sulking for? Can't you see what's up? Can't you understand that if a man will stand for two hours sulking on a inch at a time with the shade rather than disturb half a dozen niggers at work to go and get a drink, he's going to outlast those niggers off to let a couple of lookers like us crawl across his girders? What you and I are slugging at is just plain common garden work with a capital W, shirk and snarl, and it's his game!'

"And then there I saw the light. To us two the mystery of Ten Percent Wayne was revealed. He could drive men. He could make bridle without stews. While work was on, nothing else mattered. Right and wrong were measured by the needs of that bridge and death was too good for the shirkers. And with the light I forgot the bridge. In the man staring, along the dizzy height of the girder to look a leader and only remembered that he had risked his life to save just one moment stolen from the day's work."

The stem of Collingford's wine glass snapped between his fingers. "I'm sorry," he said, laying the pieces aside. He smiled a little nervously on the three faces before him. "I don't tell that story often. It goes too deep. Not everybody understands. Some people call Wayne no better than a murderer; but I'm not one of them. And Bodsky says there have been a lot of murderers he'd like to take to his club."

"I. Y., there's somebody listening at the door," said the captain. "Been there some time."

J. Y. swung around and threw open the door. He sprang forward and caught Clem in the act of flight. He brought her back into the room and sat down, holding her upright beside him. J. Y. was proud and for a moment Collingford's presence galled him. "What were you doing, Clem?" he asked.

Clements was in that degree of embarrassment and disarray which makes lovely youth a shade more lovely. Her brown hair was tumbled about her face and down her back. Her cheeks were flushed and her thin white neck seemed to tremble above the deep red of her slightly yoked frock. Her lips were moist and parted in excitement. She was sixteen and beautiful beyond the reach of back-ward phrases. The four men fixed their eyes upon her and she dropped hers. "I was over-dropping," she said in a voice that was very low but clear.

"Why, Clem?" said J. Y. gravely. Clem looked around on the four men. She did not seem afraid. Unconsciously they waited for her to go on, and she did. "Mr. Collingford was telling about Alan. I heard Chasley say he was going to. I shall always envy drop when anyone tells about Alan."

For a second her audacity, Collingford's face was the first to light up and he had been down on the table with a bang. "Hilly for you, young 'un," he cried and his clear laugh could be heard on the lawn. Before it was over the judge joined him, the captain grunted his merriest grunt, and J. Y. pined Clem's shoulder and she smiled.

Clem was of the salt of the earth among women—the kind that waits to weep till the battle is over and then becomes a thousand times more than in her weakness. Her big eyes had been well used to tears and now they jumped the barrier just as Nance rushed in and said, "What are you all laughing at? Then, she caught sight of Clem. 'Freshen her looked about the room. 'You four big hulking brutes,' she said. 'Come to me, Clem, you darling. What have they been doing to you? There, there, don't cry. Men are silly things. What if they did laugh at you?'

Clem was sobbing on Nance's shoulder. "It isn't that," she sobbed. "I don't mind that. But Mr. Collingford called me a 'young one.'"

The three gray-heads kept their faces with difficulty. Collingford leaped to his feet. "My dear young lady—Miss Clements!" he stammered. "My word, now! I didn't mean it. I'm sorry. I'll do anything if you'll only stop crying. Do stop and listen to me. I'll grovel."

It took him an hour to make his peace. (To Be Continued.)
